

What have I done to make my parents proud of me?

Hello, allow me to introduce myself, my name is Mufid and I would like to talk about the story of mine when I was in my childhood, of how my parents raised me until what I have become now, the son that can make them proud with my own achievement. I grew up as a boy in a pretty normal and simple family, since my childhood I was already taught to be independent or autonomous I don't know what it called, and when I am at kindergarten, I have already been left alone without someone siding beside me because my parents is a teacher and needed to be on the school everyday on the morning, well except Sunday of course. And then when I am at elementary school, I am starting to take a tutoring on English and started learning about the basic of English like basic words, daily words, noun, pronoun, verbs, tenses, how to spell a word, and many more. I continued to do the tutoring until I am junior high school when I decided to start learning on my own, and also it was at this time my career on English starting to get better and improved a lot. This is how I made my parents proud of me.

Since when I was in first grade until third grade on junior high school, I have been participating in many English competition both grammar competition, speaking, or even story telling. At the same time, I have also won on most of them especially on grammar and speaking competition even thought until now I am still not confident enough about my own English. Because of my much understanding on English and winning a lot of competition, it makes my parents proud of me and for myself, winning and the result of learning is already the best present for my parents that had raised me until I can do many things now.

Other than my English skill, I am able to operates and find a solution to some computer problem and android, I can also easily understand human psychology then express it to give someone a relieving word for their problem or just some motivation. I know it's not a real skill and its not that much needed on work, but since I came from a simple family, not everyone can understand or can operate a complex computer system, but with me over there with this knowledge I can help them used it, a computer or any other digital devices that common don't understand. From this experienced my parents begin to get interested on this kind of thing and let me learn more about computer knowledge and any other digital things because my parents love seeing me fixing weird things on my computer or mobile phone.

Maybe I judge myself too biased or vice versa, me myself is a lazy person, I am not pretty confident about many new things, I will always pick the path that always give me more than 50% success rate. On people eyes I seems to be a diligent person but on the other end I am just someone that will not try something new, I don't want to be the one who started something. I have once told this self-analysis to my parents and what they say about will forever change my life, "Even though you may be someone like that in your own eyes, for us you are our pride, whatever path you take, if you can do it, then do it, as long as it's a good one we will always support you whatever it is until you succeed." Thank you, mom and dad, thank you for being proud and believe at me, I swear I'll keep trying my best with my own path until I succeed.

That's all about my stories, and thank you.